Detailed Information

What a Diagnostic Assessment provides:

Diagnostic Assessments are requested for many reasons: you may have concerns that your child is not reaching their potential in the classroom, or as a student, you may need to apply for Disabled Students' Allowance for university. A detailed assessment and subsequent report will provide you with insight into your or your child's strengths and weaknesses and how difficulties can be supported going forward. As a Specialist Teacher and Dyslexia Assessor with an Assessment Practising Certificate, I am qualified to carry out a full Diagnostic assessment, which will last the lifetime of the individual.

How is an assessment carried out?

Before the Assessment:

An essential part of the assessment process is gaining background information on the individual being assessed. This is done through questionnaires: one to the parents or individual if they are over 16 years of age, and one to the individual's educational establishment or workplace. These questionnaires will be reviewed pre-assessment so that I can gain crucial information about the current situation and any long-term concerns. Based on information from a visual checklist, a more detailed eye check may need to be carried out before assessment.

Assessment Day

A suitable assessment date and location will be arranged. Ideally, this will be in my home office. As the assessor, I will carry out a series of tests following strict protocols that provide details on the following areas:

- Language skills – receptive and expressive language skills are assessed as they are the foundation for reading, spelling and maths learning.
- Cognitive ability – phonological awareness, processing speeds, working memory ability.
- Current levels of attainment in literacy – how their reading, writing and spelling compare to peers based on standardised norms.

The assessment process can take up to four hours. The battery of tests is essential to discover if any cognitive processing difficulties may be impacting literacy attainment. These challenges, when weighed up with information from the questionnaires and observations during the testing, could indicate the presence of dyslexia or a Specific Learning Difficulty (SpLD).

Post Assessment

After the assessment session, I score the test papers and compare them to the standardised norms, analyse the behaviour of the individual on the day and combine this with the questionnaire information. This will provide me with the 'full picture' and will then be written into a detailed report, following strict assessment guidelines. The report will then be relayed to the individual/family. This is an important aspect of the process as it allows the individual to understand their strengths and weaknesses in more detail. Dyslexia or an SpLD can be broad and affect people differently: gaining more detail into how it impacts an individual is therefore essential. The report will also contain personalised recommendations to support the individual in their education or work environment.
